One day a big car came to a stop beside Little Pancho Vanilla's adobe home.

"Hey, little boy," the driver called to Pancho. "Can you show me where there's a good brook to fish in? I'm on my way home from a vacation, and I haven't caught a single fish in all the time I've been gone."

"Sí, señor, I can show you such a place," Little Pancho nodded amiably. "There are many fish een the brook that runs by my house, but you may not be able to catch them."

"Don't worry about that," the man said confidently. "I've got a fortune tied up in fishing tackle. Just show me where the fish are, and I'll do the rest."

"But sometimes all the fish go upstream a ways," Little Pancho persisted. "You cannot go up there to cast because of the theek bushes on the shore and rocks in the brook."

He glanced at the hammock where his father was snoring loudly. "In spite of all your reech fishing equipment," he continued with a smile, "you do not have the one theeng which can bring the fish downstream again. Only my papacito has eet. Sometimes he goes upstream to chase the fish back down again so I can catch a few for our supper."

"Well, whatever he has, we probably won't need it," the man reassured him. "Let's get going. The longer I fish, the more I can catch."

Finding a suitable place by the brook, the man eagerly assembled his pole, selected a feathery lure, and started to fish.

He tried for over an hour, but was unable to get even one nibble, in spite of the many different kinds of lures he used.

"I don't think there are any fish here at all!" he stormed at last.

"Perhaps they have all gone upstream," Little Pancho suggested. "Would you like me to go and get my papacito to send them back downstream again?"

"Oh, please do!" the man pleaded earnestly. "I've just got to catch some fish or my vacation will be ruined!"

"I'll be back in a little while," Little Pancho promised, turning to run down the path towards his home.

A few moments later, he found his father still sleeping in the hammock between two trees by their house. His father was now snoring so heavily that the trees shook, and even the very ground seemed to tremble.

With much coaxing, Little Pancho managed to get his father to agree to return to the brook with him and go upstream.

In about half an hour, Little Pancho rejoined the fisherman. "You'll be seeing plenty of fish in a minute now, señor," he promised. "Get your fishing pole ready."

Sure enough, in just a few minutes, the water seemed to be alive with fish, flashing through the brook on their way down from the place where Little Pancho had stationed his father.

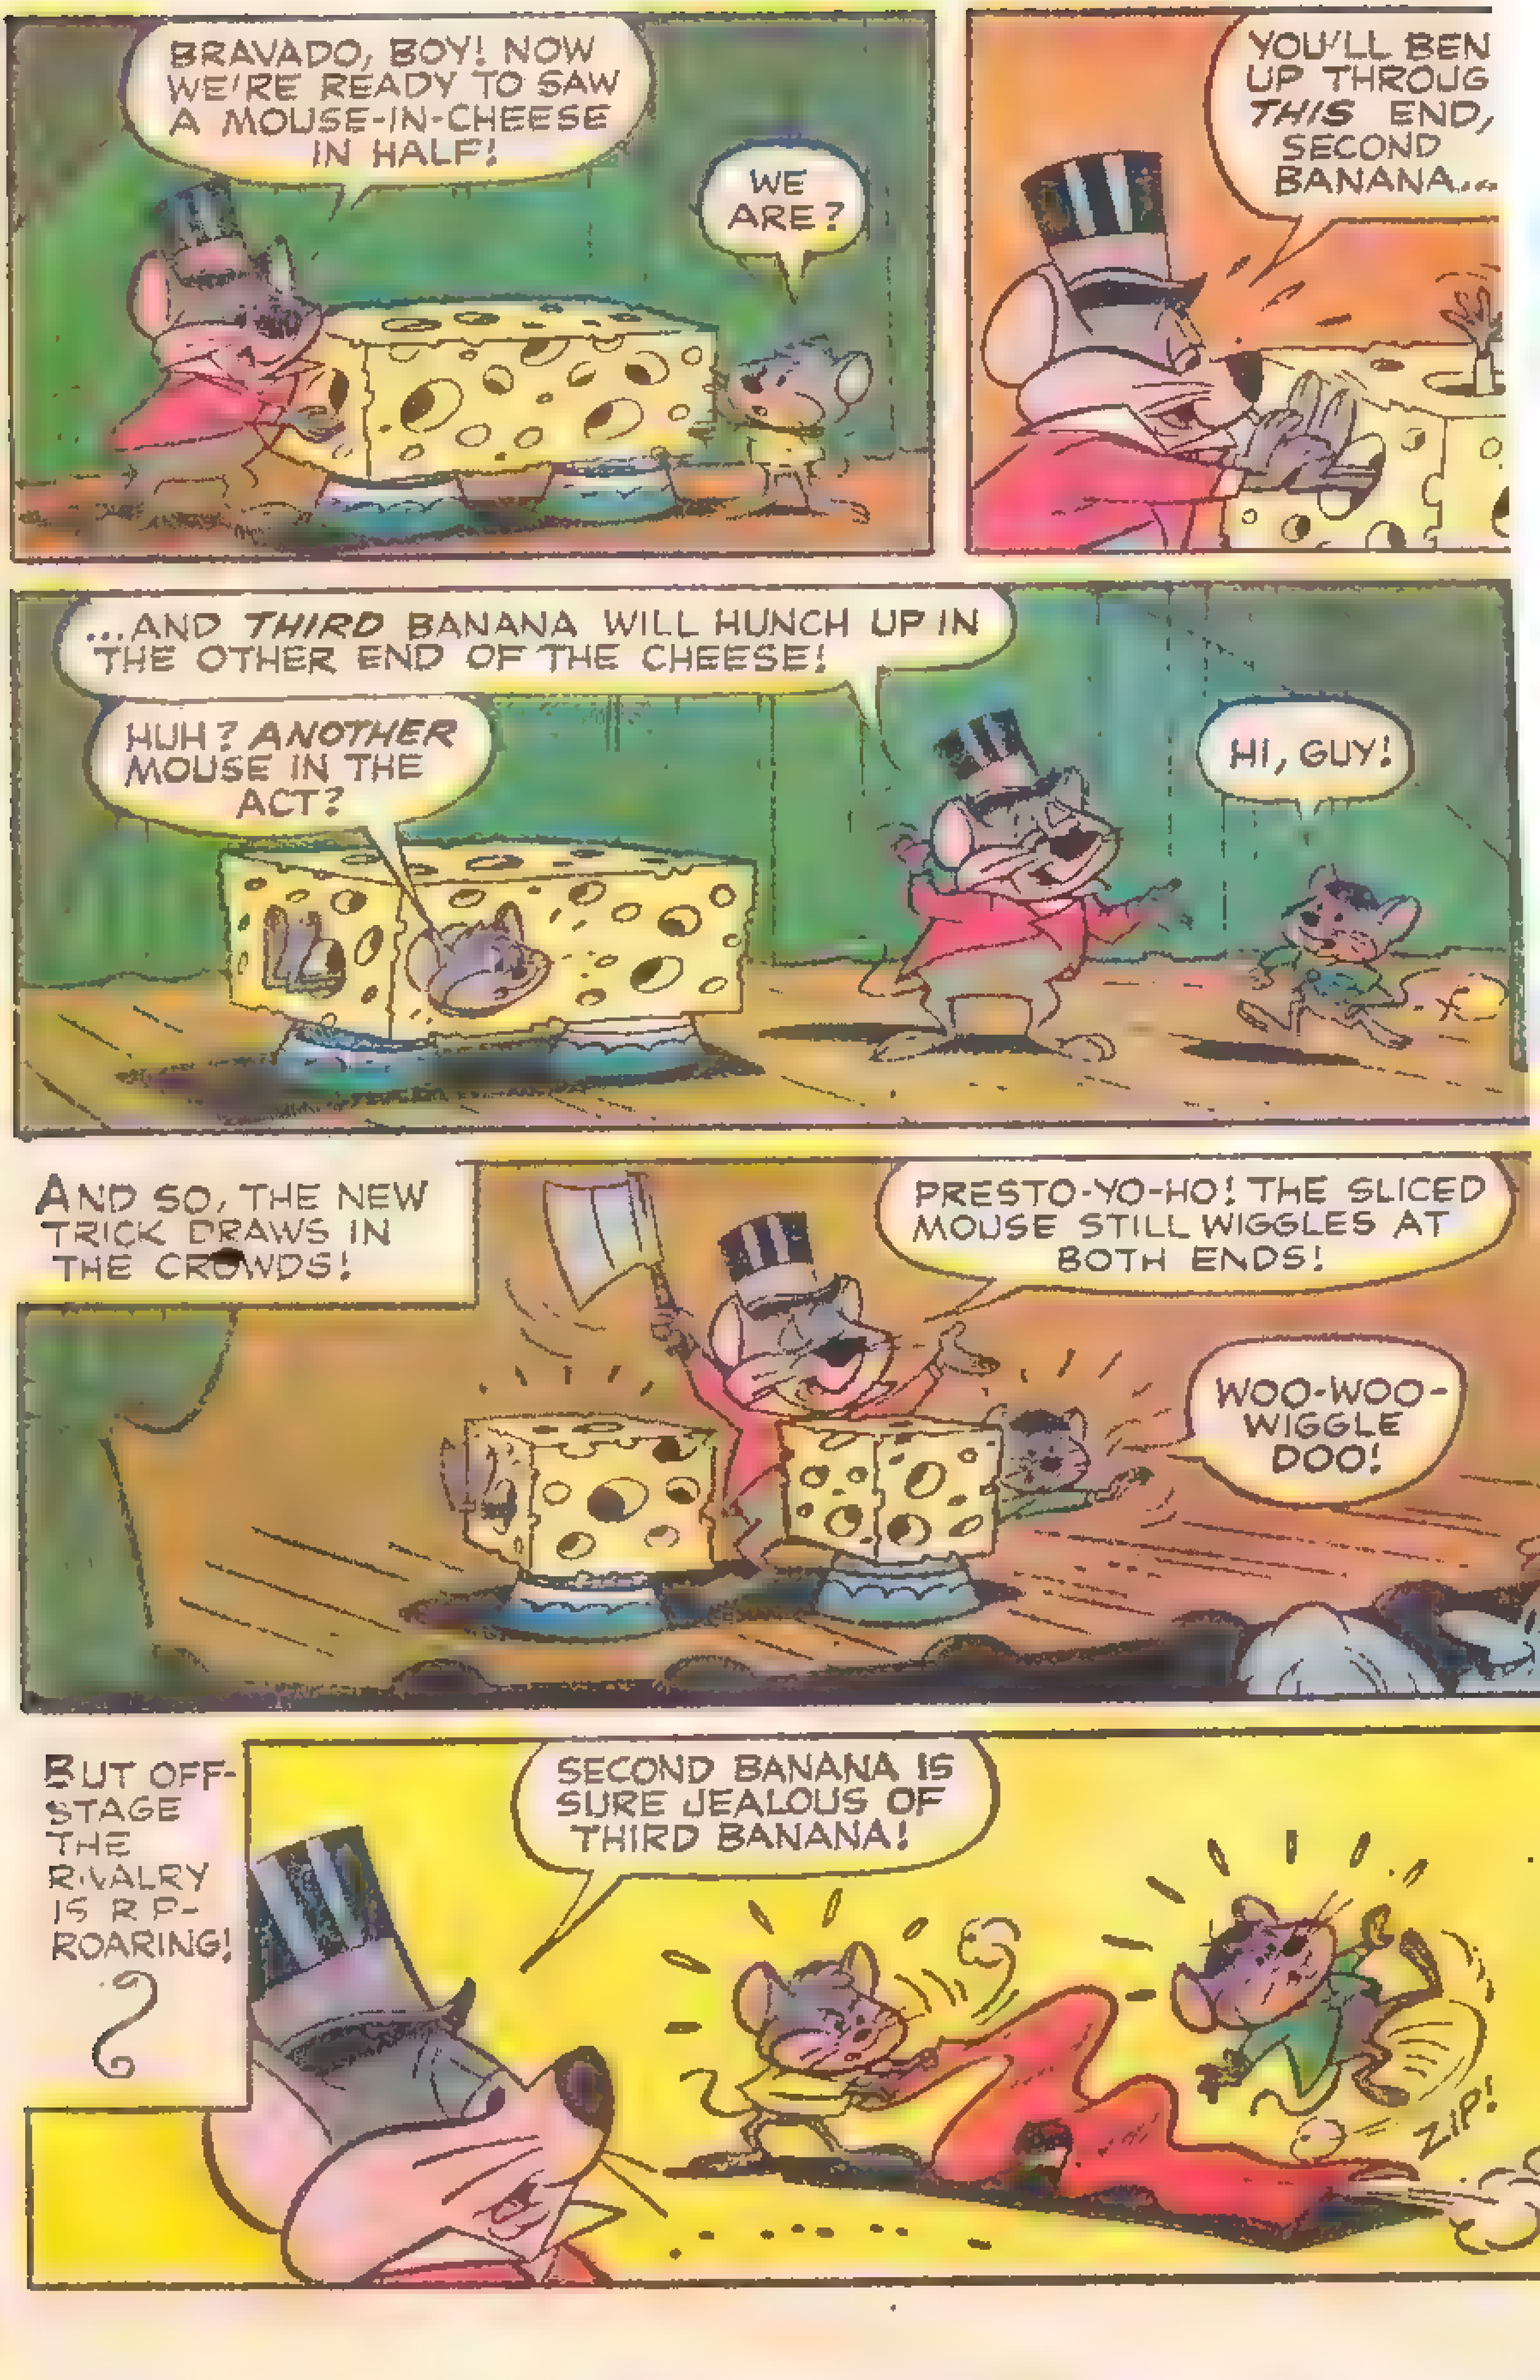

"This is marvelous!" the fisherman cried joyfully as he hauled in one fish after another. "What is this piece of fishing equipment your father uses to send the fish downstream? I'd like to buy it."

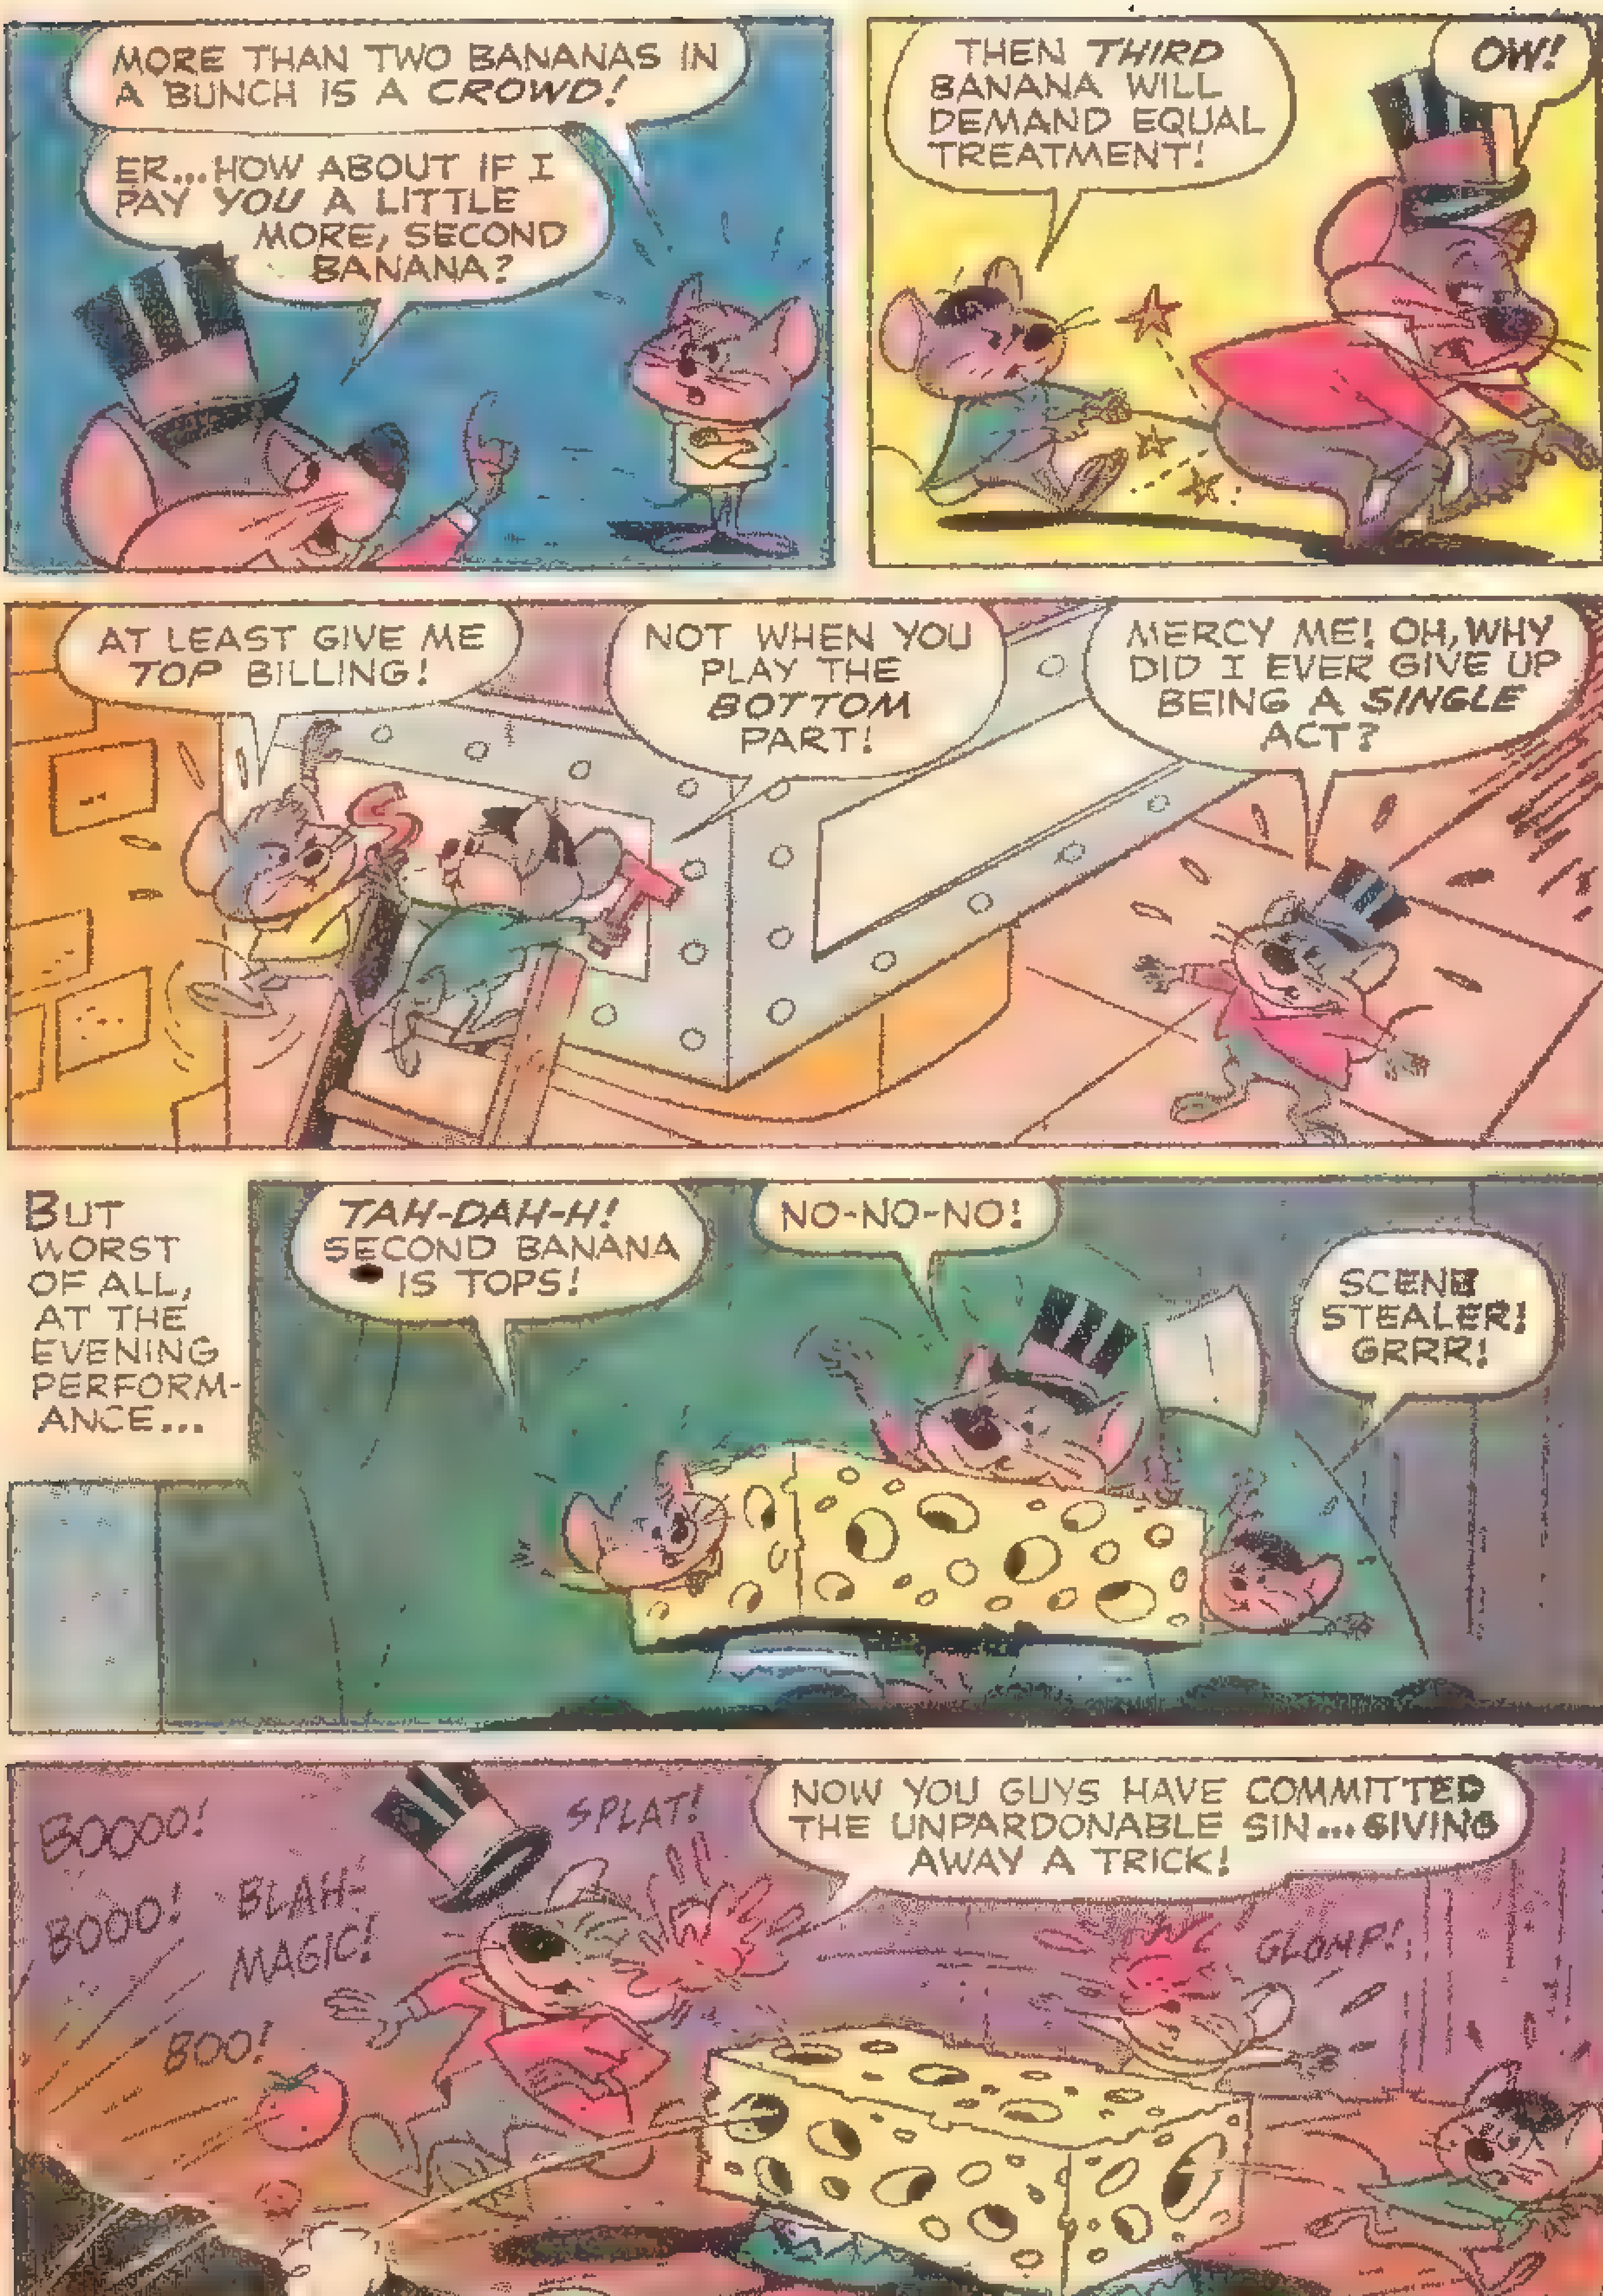

"My papacito has a snore which sounds like a bear growling," Little Pancho explained with a titter. "Eet fools the fish into thinking a bear is really after them, and that ees why they leave the place.

"He ees finishing his nap upstream right now, and I am afraid, señor," he concluded with a giggle, "that my papacito cannot sell you hees snore. In fact, he cannot even give eet away!"

As a DIETITIAN

Fancy or plain, flavorable food for good nutrition will be your goal if you choose to be a dietitian. As an administrative dietitian, you will plan and supervise the preparation of large-scale meals, buy the food and equipment, enforce sanitary and safety regulations, and prepare records in a hospital, school, or other institution.

Therapeutic dietitians plan and supervise the preparation of special meals for people on special diets. Other dietitians are employed by companies who process food or manufacture cooking equipment. Still others research the needs of persons with chronic illnesses, the aging population, and the unusual needs of space travelers.

To be a dietitian, you must earn a bachelor's degree in college, majoring in food and nutrition or institution management. To qualify for professional recognition, a one-year internship is recommended. You must have an aptitude for the sciences, particularly chemistry and mathematics, and be able to organize and manage work programs.

Because of community health programs and a greater use of hospitals, many dietitians will be needed. Experienced dietitians in hospitals earn around $1,000 a month, while school dietitians earn a little less.

As a VETERINARIAN

Animal antics and the health and care of pets and livestock will occupy your time, if you choose to be a veterinarian. As a doctor of veterinary medicine, you will treat diseases and injuries of animals, performing surgery when necessary. You will also use medicine and vaccines to keep diseases from spreading to other animals or humans.

Some veterinarians specialize in treating small animals and pets. Others specialize in the health and care of cattle, horses or poultry. Others work in public health programs inspecting meat, poultry and other food. Still other veterinarians carry on research in the prevention and treatment of both animal and human diseases.

To become a veterinarian, you must have at least two years of college followed by four years of study in a college of veterinary medicine. Good health and an understanding of and a genuine affection for animals are very necessary.

With population increases, more veterinarian services will be needed. The veterinarian in private practice generally earns the most. Those employed by state governments average around $12,000 a year, while those working in universities average about $14,000 a year.
